Capt. Steve Skevington Water LIFE Offshore

Let's start off talking about the great kingfish bite that's been going on for a month.

These fish are hitting early in the morning offshore, just watch for bait on your fishfinder and troll the hardware through. We were only 15 miles from the dock yesterday and these fish were all around the boat. We have been pulling fish left and right.

We managed to load up a livewell full of large threadfin's that we put out on 50-pound leaders and 5/0 circle hooks. These almost immediately were gobbled up by small blacktip sharks.

The permit are still on the chew. Once you find them, flatline out the crabs, the permit will not be far behind.

I haven't done a whole lot of grouper fishing in the last few trips, but what we have done has been great with limits of red grouper, and a lot of nice gag grouper as well.

Snapper are a nighttime fish right now. If you can pull yourself away from those full moon tarpon long enough you should get your limit of mangrove snapper pretty quick.

Offshore the blackfin tuna are still blasting the cedar plugs and the deeper wrecks are still holding some respectable amberjack and 'cudas.

All in all, there's a lot of great fishing going on right now.
